Dit wetsvoorstel is te onduidelijk geformuleerd en opent de deur naar ongelijke en willekeurige toepassing. Termen als “verheerlijken” en “steun betuigen” zijn onvoldoende duidelijk omschreven, waardoor vreedzame politieke meningsuiting, journalistiek werk en demonstraties onterecht strafbaar kunnen worden gesteld.

Reeds bestaande wetgeving, zoals artikel 132 Sr[1], bevat heldere en nauwkeurige criteria voor strafbare aanzetten tot geweld of terrorisme, inclusief rechterlijke toetsing. Dit nieuwe voorstel voegt daar alleen ruimere bevoegdheden aan toe, waardoor fundamentele vrijheden zoals vrijheid van meningsuiting, persvrijheid en het demonstratierecht, ernstig worden verzwakt.

Het Verenigd Koninkrijk laat zien hoe gevaarlijk zulke wetgeving in de praktijk kan uitpakken. Daar werden, na het verbod op de groep Palestine Action, tientallen vreedzame demonstranten gearresteerd, onder wie hoogbejaarden, mensen met Parkinson en oorlogsveteranen die slecht ter been zijn. Ook werd Tim Crosland, voormalig regeringsadvocaat en oprichter van de klimaatorganisatie Plan B-Earth, als een van 27 demonstranten opgepakt. Zulke ingrepen leiden niet tot meer orde en veiligheid, maar juist tot polarisatie, maatschappelijke chaos en een erosie van vertrouwen in de rechtsstaat. Ze veroorzaken institutioneel wantrouwen richting politieke ambtenaren en politiefunctionarissen, en tasten de legitimiteit van de overheid zelf aan.

Ik roep u op dit voorstel in te trekken of ingrijpend aan te passen, zodat fundamentele rechten worden beschermd en ongewenste escalatie van repressie en verdeeldheid wordt voorkomen.

1. Artikel 132 - Wetboek van Strafrecht

Support the Guardian
Fund independent journalism with €12 per month
Support us →

Protest

Profile

'A duty to intervene': the former UK government lawyer at centre of pro-Palestine protests

Tim Crosland's arrest for allegedly showing support for Palestine Action went viral and his Defend Our Juries is calling for more protests on Saturday

Ben Quinn
Fri 8 Aug 2025 16.58 CEST

Share

Tim Crosland outside the Royal Courts of Justice: 'Over time, I came to the conclusion that no, you do not make substantial change from the inside.' Photograph: Sam Tobin/PA

Handcuffed and being hauled into the back of a police van, Tim Crosland still managed to crack a smile after being arrested under the Terrorism Act last month.

"The mother of all democracies, people," the former government lawyer can be seen saying in now viral footage after he was one of 27 people arrested at the Gandhi statue in Parliament Square for allegedly showing support for a proscribed organisation, Palestine Action.

Five weeks later, Crosland, 55, is once again at the centre of the action before what is expected to be a return to the square on Saturday by hundreds of people risking arrest under anti-terrorism laws. Defend Our Juries, of which he is a co-founder, has asked them to hold up signs saying: "I oppose genocide. I support Palestine Action."

The moment is also a milestone in a personal "gamekeeper turned poacher" journey that has taken him from being a barrister holding senior positions at the Serious Organised Crime Agency (SOCA) and National Crime Agency (NCA), to being a radical activist using street protest to challenge the will of the state.

"Over time, I came to the conclusion that no, you do not make substantial change from the inside," Crosland recalls of his time working for government. A large part of his role had been to advise on human rights obligations, but he now believes he was naive about this and there was a substantial gap between the rhetoric of government organisations about rights, and the reality.

"The forces are too strong, too powerful, you can delude yourself that you're making an impact and then you can look back and see that it's just gone back to where it was."

Born in Hammersmith, west London, Crosland attended the prestigious private school St Paul's, where the future chancellor George Osborne was a year below him.

A vegetarian from a young age, he went on to study classics at Oxford, took a law conversion course and became a barrister.

His legal career before joining government led him to a life-changing experience when he worked in the deep south of the US on death row appeals - the case of a 17-year-old in New Orleans was particularly shocking.

While the work on behalf of those on death row is something he had in common with Keir Starmer, it was not until joining government that he crossed paths with the future prime minister, then a young lawyer. At SOCA, Crosland recalls instructing Starmer to write advice on positive human rights obligations and then on the intersection with the duty of care.

"I remember what he wrote was so bad we had to go to him and ask him to redo it," adds Crosland, who says Starmer's initial effort was "flaky" and he had not engaged with the question.

"He did deal with it reasonably gracefully when we said we were expecting a little bit more than that and came back with something much better."

After leaving government, Crosland became an environmental lawyer, co-founding the campaign group Plan B, which was one of the parties that brought a landmark legal case against Heathrow's owners over a planned third runway.

In a change of events that would lead to him being disbarred in 2023, he was fined £5,000 in 2021 for criminal contempt of court after deliberately making public a supreme court ruling related to the airport before the result was officially announced.

Since then he has gone from being in trouble with his friends in law, to being in trouble with the law itself. Police are yet to charge him and others who were arrested last month - he believes they are waiting in part to see what happens with a legal challenge of Palestine Action's proscription.

Either way, opting out of further activism is not an option for Crosland, who talks of "having a duty to intervene".

"We are talking about deeply peaceful, principled people who are trying to stop atrocities," he says of what might be his true "tribe", the climate activists and those campaigning against Israel's actions in Gaza.

"That is my understanding of non-violent action. It doesn't mean sitting back quietly in a corner."

Now is not the time to look away

It's the Guardian's job to keep a close focus on events in the Middle East for our global audience.

With reporters sharing live updates around the clock, including from inside Gaza, we're well-placed to provide comprehensive, fact-checked reporting to show the world what is happening in the region. But we can't do it without your support.

We rely on the generosity of our readers, whose support helps to keep our correspondents on the ground and our reporting free from commercial or political influence.

We appreciate that not everyone can afford to pay for news, but if you can, can we count on your support? Here are three good reasons to make the choice to fund us today:

1. Our quality, investigative journalism is a scrutinising force.

2. We are independent and have no billionaire owner dictating what we do - your money directly powers our reporting.

3. It doesn't cost much, and takes less time than it took to read this message.

Choosing to back us on a monthly basis makes the most impact, meaning we can continue to cover the story from every angle: the conflict, the plight of those affected and what it all means for the future of the region and the world.

Support €4/monthly

Recommended

Support €12/monthly

Unlock All-access digital benefits:

- Unlimited access to the Guardian app
- Unlimited access to our new Feast App
- Ad-free reading on all your devices
- Exclusive newsletter for supporters, sent every week from the Guardian newsroom
- Far fewer asks for support

Support with another amount

Continue → | Remind me in September | VISA | PayPal

Explore more on these topics

Protest | Gaza | Israel-Gaza war | London | Palestinian territories | profiles

Share | Reuse this content

Most viewed

1 'I had her right in front of me. And now she's gone': how one mother lost her daughter to mental illness

2 'I was like a tornado going through men's lives': meet the people who can't stop getting married

3 'Why is this happening?': violent attacks terrify Ireland's immigrant community

4 'Can you tell us how he died?': Mohamed Salah criticises Uefa over tribute to 'Palestinian Pelé'

5 Trump administration threatens to strip Harvard University of lucrative patents

Related stories

Palestine Action co-founder wins permission to challenge ban
30 Jul 2025

Two UK pro-Palestine organisations have bank accounts frozen
20 Jul 2025

Ban on Palestine Action to take effect after legal challenge fails
4 Jul 2025

UK MPs vote to proscribe Palestine Action as terrorist group
2 Jul 2025

Huge at pr ahea confi
20 Sep

More from News

Ukraine
Path to peace cannot be decided without Ukraine, says Europe
2h ago

Gaza
'A deadly scheme': Palestinians face indiscriminate gunfire at food sites
19h ago

Trump administration
White House threatens to strip Harvard University of lucrative patents
10h ago

Technology
TikTok to replace trust and safety team in Germany with AI and outsourced labor
51m ago

Cosme
Expe DIY i injec illeg
3h ago

Most viewed

Across The Guardian | In World News

1 Pete Hegseth reposts video that says women shouldn't be allowed to vote

2 'I was like a tornado going through men's lives': meet the people who can't stop getting married

3 'Why is this happening?': violent attacks terrify Ireland's immigrant community

4 'Can you tell us how he died?': Mohamed Salah criticises Uefa over tribute to 'Palestinian Pelé'

5 Trump administration threatens to strip Harvard University of lucrative patents

6 Digital resurrection: fascination and fear over the rise of the deathbot

7 'I had her right in front of me. And now she's gone': how one mother lost her daughter to mental illness

8 I'm 15 and in love, but I have to walk on eggshells with my boyfriend. What can I do?

9 Police arrest 474 people at protest over Palestine Action ban in London

10 Women call out 'creepy' experiences on Vinted as trolls and image thieves target site

© 2025 Guardian News & Media Limited or its affiliated companies. All rights reserved. (dcr)

Back to top